STOCK MARKET IN CHAOTIC STATE

Periods of Marked Weakness Were Followed By Others of Pronounced Strength.

IRREGULAR OPENING MONDAY

Close of Trading On Saturday Showed Underlying Strength and Many Advances.

NEW YORK, January 28 .- The stock market during the past week has been marked by great feverishness and irregularity, with periods of marked weakness gularity, with periods of marked weakness succeeded by others of pronounced strength in rapid succession. In the early part of the week the market continued its upward tendency with a further tremendous advance in Reading, and new high records were made in many quarters. The rapid rise in Reading was, in fact, one of the causes of the subsequent weakness, as it was so rapid and so prolonged as to give rise to apprehension that a corner might result. Just at the time this rise was culminating very heavy selling started in Amagnmated Copper, and on this selling the entire list broke sharply. It subsequently rallied, then turned weak again, making, for the most part, the lowest prices on the second decline from which a fair sized rally took place. Although general liquidation was rather Atthough general industrial darge, heavy pressure was only everted in a few of the active stocks which recently have had very big advances, live Amalgamated Copper, Reading and Union Pacific, and in some of the specialties which had been advanced too rapid-

The generally active railroad list was well bought on the decline and this was notably so in the Pennsylvania group; Norfolk and Western. Chesapeake and Ohlo, Baitimore and Ohlo and Southern Railway, all making new high records on this movement.

The opening on Monday was rather irregular, but the market displayed considerable strength in certain quarters, St. Paul was a firm feature but heavy realizing was reported in a number of issues and the general list at times had a weak appearance.

Recoveries at first incked "snap" but upward movements in particular issues helped the general tone of the market. In the early afternoon the Pennsylvania group was in good demand, and activity at this time was generally confined to the railroad quarter. Under cover of this strength, however, there were indications of realizing in other departments and in the last half hour considerable weakness developed in the general list. There were firegular recoveries in the last few minutes but final prices were at net losses for the day.

There was decided weakness in scrne of the leading stocks on Tuesday, but the market was highly irregular from start to finish, and many issues were advanced during the course of the trading. The selling pressure was greatest in Amalgamated Copper, Reading and Union Pacific, although the latter issue enjoyed a recovery in the afternoon which carried the price above Monday's closing. Amalgamated Copper railed only feebly, and there were apparently liberal offerings on the advance. Colorado Fuel and Iron was a feature of strength, making an advance of about eight points from the early low price. Denver and Rio Grande and Southern Railway also neiwanced materially on heavy transactions, and a few other Issues among the low-priced group were in good demand at different times during the day. The tone at the close was firm, although inche of the buying at this time was flought to be for short account.

Wednesday's market was decidedly strong, and material advances were recorded in many Issues were about t

The stock market was less active Friday, and prices moved with comparatively narrow limits. There was further liquidation in Reading, in the early trading and this had an unfavorable influence in other directions, but there was evidence of a fair demand for stocks on the fractional recessions. On the other hand, the rallies met with considerable offerings, and there was little distinct trend to the general course of prices. The closing was quiet and at a fractional advance.

The early trading on Saturday was uninteresting, but with a good deal of underlying strength and many advances throughout the list, Amalgamated Copper, Baltimore and Ohlo and the Steel stocks among the active issues being especially strong. Very little interest was shown in the proceedings until the appearance of the weekly bank statement. This was a much less favorable document than had been anticipated, showing a slight decrease in surplus reserves, while a big increase had been expected.

showing a slight decrease in surplus reserves, while a big increase had been expected.

For fully ten minutes after its publication the market falled to reflect its favorable character, but in the last twenty minutes a selling movement set it, the entire list declined sharply under the lead of Rending, which again showed a big break. The pressure in some stocks cense abolished.

Bull Leaders Depressed Over No Encouraging News From Any Source.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) CHICAGO, January 28.—It has been a week of bearish influence in the wheat narket. It was a chaotic week beginning with the severe storms which put most of the time. The weather had a depressing effect time. The weather had a depressing effect upon the bull leaders and with their support half-hearted and lacking encouragement in any news received from domestic or foreign sources, there was nothing in the way of the hears to press their advantage. The surprising thing was, not that they depressed prices two cents or more, but that they did not do more than that.

to day in the fact that on successive breaks there was inevitable covering of sufficient volume to check the downward tendency.

In the northwest there was information of some further expansion in the manufacture and sale of flour but the emargement was at no time impressive in view of the immense of stores of wheat in that part of the country and the continuance of receipts from first hand. So striking is this movement and accumulation that there is more talk than ever that the spring wheat crop has been underestimated all season, by the government, as well as other calculators. There is now substantial evidence that the movement in the northwest is likely to continue to the end of this crop, year. The argument setting forth regarding the advantageous position this country holds with reference to the markets of the world has come to haught thus far. Statisticians had it that Manitota was not in a position to deliver much wheat promptly on account of its long distance from the depots of delivery, that Russia had dropped low in the ranks of providers of wheat, that India might be counted practically out of the market from lack of supplies and that Argentine was not a contender for immediate demands.

The unavoidable conclusion, they held, was that America would necessarily be looked to as the chief source of supply, regardless of prices in Manitoba. The fact of the case have not proved that the point was well taken. Europe is yet to manifest any particular anxiety over the situation. Foreign buyers have not been convinced that the time is at hand when they must allow themselves to be dictated to by the American shipper. Whether the volume afloat and on the way by land is large or small—a week's supply or a month's suply—foreign complacency remains at high tide, Meantime shipments are going out from Argentine in larger and larger volume and Manitoba is looked to for a share of wheat because it is considerably cheaper than American wheat.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) Robert Fitzsimmons generally prepared himself carefully for all of his important ring battles, there was one encounter for ring battles, there was one encounter for which he failed to train properly because of overconfidence.

It was the first meeting with Jeffries, and probably because of this carelessness Fitzsimmons lost the heavyweight champlonship. The Cornishman, after this setback, repeatedly declared that he had been drugged in the ring by one of his seconds, but he knew all the time that this was a fabrication, and that his poor slowing was chiefly due to lack of physical condition.

The real story of Fitzsimmons's training for this battle with Jeffries has never been told until now, but these facts can joit to the jaw in the second round, it was apparent that Fitz's championship, won so handsomely from Corbett, was about to slip from his grasp.

After that, with the exception of a few streaks of the old skill, Fitz was a pugilistic joke, and proved to be an easy mark for the swift-footed roung giant, who took advantage of all openings, and sent home the punches until finally Robert went down and out in the eleventh round.

not be denied, for they were drawn from personal observation while Fitz was going through the alleged training schedule down at Bath Beach one week before he met the boilernaker at Coney Island.

When Jeffries first came East, under the management of William A. Brady, he was a big, green novice, who had carned some notoriety by assisting Corbett to train for the mill with Fitzsimmons at Carson City.

Jeffries weighed 245 pounds when he stepped into the ring at the old Lenox A. C., in Harlem, one night to indulge in two ten-round bouts with Bob Armstrong, a well-known colored puglist, who was under Tom O'Rourke's wing, and Stee O'Donnell, the Australian boxer. It was a sort of a try-out for Jeffries, who agreed to knock out both men inside the limit.

Fitzsimmons went up to the club that limit.

Fitzsimmions went up to the club that night to look the bollermaker over, and when he saw him lumber about the ring like an elephant in his bout with Armstrong, the Cornishman laughed deristicals.

"Jeff a Bloomin' Lobster."

"He's a bloomin' lobster!" exclaimed Fitzsimmons as he walked out of the building. "I'd knock his bleedin' head off In a round!"

It was with a feeling that it was a shame to take the money, therefore, that Fliz signed articles to meet Jeffries for In a round!"

all this time the Cornishman enjoyed him-self to the limit. At his moonday and evening meals he drank plenty of beer, which, he said, was calculated to put on flesh. He also topped off these repasts with brandy, and after supper he generally went to one of the neignboring fresh-nic reserts, where he spent several hours putting away the seductive highball while the band played lively nuste

Meanwhile, Jeffries was getting ready down at Allenhurst, N. J., with the aid of Billy Delaney and Tommy Ryan.

He ran miles on 'the road, worked morning, noon and night to perfect his stamina and strength, and a week lefore the battle he jumped on the scales one day and tipped the beam at 208 neurols stripped.

Not Afraid of Fitz.

Two days later Fitzsimmons was told that Jeffries would prove the biggest kind of a surprise, and that Cornishman might lose; but the latter merely laughed sarcastically, and swallowed a highball after punching the bag in a desultory way for five minutes.

Fitzsimmons had several bracers before he entered the ring at Coney Island the night of the mill.

He growled at several friends, who hinted that Jeffries would prove a hard nut to crack, and fairly ran down from his dressing room when the time arrived to shake hands.

Those who saw this memorable fight will easily recall the fact that the moment Fitzsiamons put up his hands and began to move about he lacked his usual speed and ginger.
